In the first Women's Triologue, held in March 2009, we decided on the following common principles: (a) we would oppose any peace agreement which violated women's rights or human rights; (b) we would seek to stop carryover of strategic rivalries to each other's terrain; and (c) we would support each other's campaigns in peacemaking.

How and in which ways can we translate these principles into action on the ground?

2-4 pm Session II: Peacemaking initiatives and the role of women

In all three of our countries women have been engaged in peacemaking on the ground, yet few are able to influence the shape of the peace table let alone be present at it. While all three of our governments have made and are making attempts to ensure better participation of women in government and politics, especially at local and parliament levels, in which ways can we help improve and strengthen these efforts?

Is there a regional role in this process? Should we, as women, take the initiative in pushing the SAARC Social Charter to take on programs that impact on the ground?

Speakers (7-10 minutes each): Susani Wardak, Kabul University, Renuka Misra, Sadbhavana Trust, Beena Sarwar, journalist

Chairs: Dr Nadera Hayat, Deputy Minister for Education, Rahela Hasheem Siddiqui, Advisor Civil Service Commission

Saturday, October 3, 2009:

10 am- 1 pm. Session III: Common problems and challenges/concerns

One issue that is common to all three countries is skewed personal laws (applying to the duties of a wife and her rights to divorce/maintenance and property) that render women more rather than less vulnerable. In India and Afghanistan the problem is especially acute for women in minority communities. In Pakistan and Afghanistan, moreover, there is a disturbing trend against girl's education, and frequent attacks on girls' schools.

What can we do redress these imbalances? Should the community or government step in to look after ill-treated or abandoned women? Or should there be an "opt out" clause in all personal laws to permit women living under personal law to seek redress through civil law? What about affirmative action for girls' education?

Speakers (7-10 minutes each): Professor Zoya Hasan, Jawaharlal Nehru University, Baela Raza Jamil, Idara-e-Taleem-o-Aagahi, Nargis Nihan, Ministry of Education
